malaria, yellow fever, and typhoid fever. Mosquitoes may be exterminated by draining the standing water in which they breed or by pouring oil on the ^{standing} water or by introducing fishes that will feed upon the young mosquitoes that that standing water has. The wrigglers die when petroleum is put on the water, because oxygen is shut off and therefore the young mosquitoes will have no supply of oxygen.
And the floating petroleum is hard for the young mosquitoes to pierce through their organs that come out of the water to breathe. And we know that all animals or plants whether small or big can not live without oxygen, and by so doing the young mosquitoes will be forced to be killed for lack of oxygen, because they can be used as food of fish.
