TRAINING MEMORANDUM No. 2.

Subject: Messages and Reports.

To : All Unit Leaders.

1. All unit leaders should instruct their men as to the proper method of writing messages and reports. The following is an outline of the proper elements which a message or report should incorporate.

a. Messages - Messages may be either oral or written.

- (1) Oral Messages - in the heat of battle frequently grabbed, and are therefore to be used with extreme caution, and only when the sender is reasonably certain the messenger will accurately transmit to the recipient intended. The following points should be observed by the sender:
  - (a) Use oral messages for short distances only.
  - (b) The message must be short, ordinarily of not more than one short sentence.
  - (c) The messenger is required to repeat back to the sender the name of the person to whom the message is addressed, his location, the entire message, the name and designation of the sender and the sender's location; several times if necessary.
  - (d) The sender assures himself that the messenger knows the exact route to the person to whom the message is addressed.

(2) Written Messages - When a message is sent to a considerable distance, and especially when it is necessary to report exactly the location of the sender, written messages, often accompanied by simple sketches, are used. They are more accurate and more readily understood if prepared in a systematic manner, according to form. All written messages whether or not placed on a standard message blank, should include the following:

- (a) The serial number of the message. Where several messages are sent by a scout during a single mission of reconnaissance, they should be numbered serially for identification, so that the commander may know if any are missing.

TRAINING MANUAL No. 1

Subject: Messages and Reports

To: All Unit Leaders

1. All unit leaders should instruct their men as to the proper method of writing messages and reports. The following is an outline of the proper elements which a message or report should include:

a. Messages - Messages may be either oral or written.

(1) Oral messages - In the heat of battle frequently needed, and are therefore to be used with extreme caution, and only when the sender is reasonably certain the message will be accurately transmitted to the receiver. The following points should be observed by the sender:

(a) The message should be short, ordinarily not more than one short sentence. The message is repeated to repeat back to the sender the name of the person to whom the message is addressed, the location, the entire message, and the sender's location - several times if necessary.

(b) The sender assures himself that the messenger knows the exact route to the person to whom the message is addressed.

(2) Written messages - When a message is sent to a considerable distance, and especially when it is necessary to report exactly the location of the sender, written messages, often composed by simple sketches, are used. They are prepared in a systematic manner, according to the following instructions:

(a) The serial number of the message. When several messages are sent by a single person, they are numbered in order of sequence.

SECRET

DECLASSIFIED
Authority NND 883678

- (b) The place from which the message is sent, so described that it can be located in the map, by the person receiving it.
- (c) The date and hour at which the message is sent.
- (d) The name of the person to whom sent; usually the officer responsible for the scout's mission. If there is little danger of the message falling into enemy possession, the official designation may also be stated.
- (e) A description of the objects or events which form the subject of the message. The scout should carefully distinguish between what he actually sees with his own eyes and what he deduces from his observations, unless the deduction are plain and inevitable. Items of information gleaned through reports of others should be so reported, as "A farmer states" or "Private Jones saw"
- (f) The exact locality at which an event occurs or and object is seen. Usually, this item may be shown by the azimuth from the scout's position and the estimated range in yards. A simple sketch is most useful in conveying such information.
- (g) The time at which an event occurs.
- (h) A statement of the intended next action of the scout, such as "Remain in observation," or "Continue on mission."
- (i) The signature and rank of the sender.

b. Reports - The scout should keep notes of all information gathered and on his return should make a report to his commander. If written, it includes the following:

- (1) If a patrol, the size of the patrol.
- (2) Name of scout (or patrol leader).
- (3) Mission.
- (4) Time of departure.
- (5) Route.
- (6) Number of enemy seen; kind of troops (infantry, cavalry, artillery); where seen; actions.
- (7) Attitude of the enemy (alert, careless).
- (8) Condition of the enemy defenses (wire, trenches, etc.)
- (9) General character of the ground passed over.
- (10) Route of return.
- (11) Time of return.
- (12) If a patrol, condition of the patrol (casualties)
- (13) Any other information of importance, not included in the specific orders to the scout, particularly any gassed areas encountered.

CABUOAO CLEARING STATION
1st Hosp. Co, 121st Inf

19th April 1945

SUBJECT: PATIENTS, AWOL
TO : C.O., 121st Inf, USAPIP, NL
(Att'n. S-1)

1. Patients Abraham Baradi and Hipolito Corpuz both Privates of "D" Co, 1st Bn, were granted pass on April 11 to visit their families in San Juan, La Union. Instead of going only to San Juan they proceeded to Bengang where they claim to have fallen ill. It is highly probable that they malingered there and by so doing were able to secure the medical certificate which they are presenting. When they were granted pass, they were already well. In fact we already agreed that they will return to duty upon the expiration of their 24-hour pass.

2. They reported back to this station only this morning.
