Topic: To compare the reproduction of plants with that of animals.

Mat.: Chart and models illustrating process of fertilization and development in plants and animals.

Method: Compare by means of charts, fertilization in several ~~stages~~ types of plants with that in some simple animals.

Obs.: How does fertilization take place in a flowering plant? In a fern? In a moss? In a very simple plant.

In animals, which is the larger, sperm or egg cell? which is the movable cell? Explain how a single cell (fertilized egg) shows development. How does the blastula stage differ from the gastrula stage?

Ans. to Obs.: Fertilization takes place in flowering plant is that when the sperm ^{in the pollen grain} nucleus unites with the egg nucleus ^{in the ovules resulting to a fertilized egg.} In ferns, within the gamete W

Con: The skin is the most sensitive to touch.

(6) heat a cold

Mat: Large wire nail, pen, ink, ruler.

Method & Obs: With a ruler & a pen draw a square inch under the ^{side} surface of your wrist. Heat a wire nail until it feels warm. Now lightly touch all parts of the skin in the square area. Do all parts feel the heat, or only the point of slight pressure of the nail? Mark with a little colored spots that are sensitive to heat.

Now cool off the nail by placing it on ice. Wipe it dry & apply while still cold in the same way to the area marked off on the wrist. Do you feel the sensation of cold in all spots? - in ink as before, using a bat, this time.

Ans: 1. ~~No~~ All parts don't feel the heat & cold but only the point that had been touched feel the heat.

2. ~~No~~ We don't feel the sensation in all parts but only the spot touched, feels the sensation.
