shell is smooth and brilliantly colored. Pearls are not the only precious thing obtained in the inside of shells, for the shells themselves are sometimes useful. The window shell comes from a clean clam, which is white outside and pear inside. This shell is used all in making screens, lamp shades, and trays.

The native Philippine oysters are found along the Philippine coasts, especially at Parangue and Malabon. These are cultivated in beds which are sometimes fenced by poles or stakes to keep enemies away. The starfish cause great destruction to oyster beds. Oysters lay eggs in great number. The young oyster, when it leaves the parent, swims through the water during the first two days. Then it attaches itself to a rock, a dead shell, or a piece of wood. It feeds on very small animals and vegetation which are carried to it by the water currents.

Some clams are good to eat, but others are not. The clams hide in the mud.

mud and sand to keep away from enemies. The starfish which destroy the oyster does not harm the clam. During the falling tide, clams dig holes and lie quietly in them. When the tide rises, they open their shells to collect the food particles with their gills.

Pearl shells are round and flat in shape. Mother-of-pearly produces many eggs. Pearls are obtained from shells which bring high prices on the market. The valuable shells are used for manufacturing buttons, fans, knife and umbrella handles, and card cases.

Another beautiful shell is the "chambered" or "pearly" nautilus. It is about seven to eight inches in diameter. On the outside the shell is smooth and white, with many bands of reddish brown. The inside part is made of chambers. The mouth is armed with mandibles. It has two large projecting eyes. It feeds on crabs and lobsters. They are also used for making lamp shades, vases, drinking cups, and spoons, etc. The nautilus is caught by the use of a bamboo trap baited with a chicken. The most important fishing ground is on the southern coast of Negros and around Siatayon Island.

Rock snails are of different kinds. Some are white, some are brown, some are gray, and some are yellow. Some breathe by means of their gills; others, by means of lungs.

The female carries her tentacles straight, but the male carries one of his curled. Snails lay tiny eggs. When the snail is about the size of a pinhead, it breaks out of the jelly mass, and then grows very rapidly.

(PHILIPPINE CROWS)

The crows are about 55 centimeters in length. The common crow is found in nearly all the islands. The plumage is black, glossed with green and purple. The Philippine crows are well known and disliked in nearly all parts of the country. They eat various seeds, fresh fruit, insects, chickens, and dried fish.

(ISLAND PAINTED QUAIL)

This bird is about 18 centimeters long. It is often called tico-tico. This name is an imitation of its call. It eats insects, worms, and small seeds. This bird is very hard to see because it lives on the ground and hides in the grass. The nest is carefully hidden under a tuft of grass. The nest contains three or four green eggs spotted with brown.

The quail has a very short tail. Its bill and feet are similar to those of the hen's. Like the hen, it uses its feet for scratching.

(PHILIPPINE ORIOLE) --Antolinac--

It is about 30 centimeters in length. This beautiful bird is found throughout the islands. Its feathers are yellow and black. It builds its nest, which is made of grass fastened to the end of a twig, in the mango tree. These birds are admired by everybody because of their skill as builders, their cheerful song, and their love for their young.

(LUZON BLOOD-REGASTED DOVE) --Tocno--

It is about 15 centimeters long. It is not so beautiful as the kingfishers and the sunbirds. Its feathers are dull brown with a long and narrow tail. It eats insects. It uses its bill in weaving. The nest is made of soft plant down and is protected and concealed by a large leaf. Holes are made in this leaf through which plant fibers are passed to fasten it to the nest.
